Description

Provide a short description of the event and its activities.

Between November 2025 and July 2026, Circolo Gianni Bosio (CGB) supported young people involved in Blue4EU in designing and implementing 10 youth-led community intervention projects and advocacy activities in Italy. The projects built on the methods, historical content and experiences developed during previous Blue4EU activities and aimed to combat racism and intolerance, address historical distortion, and promote EU fundamental rights and values.

The initiatives were implemented in Rome, Turin, Monzambano and Collelongo, based on the young people and CGB's networks and events, and used a wide range of participatory formats. These included public presentations and discussions on the Blue4EU experience; oral-history-based visits to the Fosse Ardeatine; a World Café exploring belonging, democracy and the impact of political decisions on everyday life; discussions on Nazi occupation, antifascism and civil liberties; a university seminar on oral history methodology; a Theatre of the Oppressed/Newspaper Theatre action addressing migration, human rights; a workshop for youth workers on media literacy, critical thinking, oral history and storytelling; and community and intergenerational activities exploring memories of emigration through family photographs, crafts and oral history.

A central feature of WP14 was youth leadership. Young people (13-25 years old), part of previous Blue4EU activities or volunteers supporting them, planned the activities, prepared materials, facilitated discussions, organised performances and workshops, and shared the knowledge and methods acquired through Blue4EU with wider audiences. Across the 10 projects, 44 unique young people took youth leadership roles. A further 128 unique young people participated in the activities, together with 217 other stakeholders, including educators, youth workers, university staff, community members, cultural actors and members of the general public. Overall, WP14 reached 389 unique individuals: 212 female and 177 male. (The participant group also included seven people from Romania and two from the Netherlands, who decided to join CGB activities).

The activities connected historical memory with contemporary questions of democracy, migration, discrimination, civic participation and fundamental rights. Oral history and storytelling were particularly important in creating dialogue between generations and in helping participants connect personal and community memories with broader historical and European contexts. Other participatory approaches, including World Café, performative methods and facilitated community discussions, created space for reflection, exchange and critical engagement.

The implementation and results of the youth-led projects were also disseminated through the Blue4EU and CGB social media channels, and other stakeholders. 22 social media posts, reels and stories documented and promoted the activities.

The deliverable includes only the database summary sheet, covering all young people and stakeholders. The full database is not included because it contains personal data relating to 81 young people aged 13–18.
